WOULD RESERVE PARK SOUTH OF ALBERNI CANAL

C. L. Harrison Tells Gyro Club His Opinion of Logical Location

RIDICULOUS STATEMENT REGARDING TITINAT

That the section of the West Coast of Vancouver Island, which lies south of Alberni Canal was in every way more suitable for a national park than the more northerly stretch of coast which includes Long Beach, was the opinion strongly expressed by C. L. Harrison at yesterday's luncheon of the Gyro Club.

One of the principal reasons which had led him to form this opinion, said Mr. Harrison, was the fact that the southern area had a low altitude. South of the canal the coast ran almost in a straight line, and the deep arms and canyons of the suggested northern portion were absent.

It had, moreover, the indisputable advantage of lending itself to the construction of a road, from by far the greater part of which it would be possible to obtain a clear view of the ocean.

BEAUTIFUL SLIDES
Mr. Harrison illustrated his address with a number of beautiful colored slides. The first of these showed that section of the coast which had already been constructed from Jordan River in the direction of Port San Juan. This section of the road, he explained, would not be within view of the sea, but would pass through stretches of magnificent timber.

Recently, the question of extending this road had been revived and had been attended by considerable opposition from certain other districts.

The speaker said he wished to take this opportunity of exploding a theory, recently advanced in the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, that the Titinat River at Cloose could only be bridged at the cost of $1,000,000. This, he said, could be crossed with a span of about 140 feet, at a cost of approximately $14,000.

RACING ON LONG BEACH
Mr. Harrison ridiculed many of the reports circulated regarding Long Beach. It had been stated that high-powered cars could race along this beach for a distance of ten miles, while, as a matter of fact, it was only possible to drive any sort of car over the beach for a bare six miles.

Other of Mr. Harrison's slides showed views of the beautiful Pechena River, where the otter live and breed to this day. The area which Mr. Harrison suggested for a park had also, as this portion of the year round, and chains of lakes well stocked with trout.

The land, he said, was almost entirely owned by the Dominion or Provincial Governments, and at Pechena Bay, with one small exception, was not privately owned, as was the case at Long Beach, which, he contended, was a disadvantage.

COLUMNS OF SPRAY
Another interesting photograph showed columns of water shooting up from a "blow hole" to the height of many feet. There were several of these also in this portion of the coast, said the speaker, and a di'inct tremor of the nearby ground could be felt.

Magnificent waterfalls occurred at intervals. Of these, perhaps the most striking, was the Tauslat Falls, which appeared as a great gash of white on the coast line when viewed from the sea.

"At present," said Mr. Harrison in conclusion, "our tourist trade flows northwards for the purpose of the we can complete the circuit I have suggested we should enormously increase that trade, besides building up a magnificent playground for Canada."

SUSPECT FOUL PLAY IN WINNIPEG DEATH
WINNIPEG, Nov. 3.—Foul play is suspected in the death of Robert Allison, a local resident, who was found dead this morning in a yard at the rear of a house in the downtown section of the city.

Allison's skull is believed to have been fractured, and blood had issued profusely from wounds in the head. Police entertain the theory that the victim was attacked by an axe-wielder, or an assailant with a heavy blunt instrument.

The body was found in the yard at the rear of a house on Lily Street, just a block from his own residence on Martha Street.

CONVENTION OF FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH WILL TAKE PLACE TOMORROW

Tomorrow the Vancouver Island Baptist Association will hold its annual convention in the First Baptist Church, Quadra Street. At the afternoon and evening sessions Miss Edith Mann, a returned missionary from India, will address the meetings.

Rev. C. K. Morse, superintendent of Baptist missions in British Columbia, will also address both sessions on "Evangelism" and "The Church That Wins," the latter being an address especially designed for young people and their work and influence in the church.

Dr. Christwell, of the First Baptist Church, Vancouver, will address the evening gathering. There will be a song service and music at both sessions.

COZENS SPENCER IS BURIED ON MAINLAND
VANCOUVER, Nov. 3.—Funeral services for Cozens Spencer, Chilcotin rancher whose body was found last week by an Indian in the Chilcotin River, were conducted today at Nunn & Thompson's Chapel by Rev. C. C. Owen. Interment was in Ocean View Cemetery.

Spencer, known as the "cattle king of the Cariboo," is believed to have killed his ranch stockkeeper, Edward Smith, and seriously wounded Walter H. Stoddard, ranch manager, while temporarily insane, more than seven weeks ago.

Erected to Hero of Sea

DEDICATION of a monument at Margareville, Annapolis County, N.S., in memory of Capt. Clair Baker, master of the steamship Ruby L. II, who lost his life in a heroic effort to save the lives of his crew when the Ruby L. II foundered off the Nova Scotia coast in a storm last January. The monument was erected by popular subscription by The Halifax Herald and was recently unveiled in the presence of a large number of friends of Captain Baker.

New Mark for Egg-Laying Is Set by B.C. Hen

VANCOUVER, Nov. 3.—A new world record of 357 eggs in 365 days was made by White Leghorn pullet No. 5 in the Dominion experimental farm egg-laying contest at Agassiz, B.C., under trap-nesting rules. The eggs averaged more than twenty-six ounces to the dozen.

The bird is from the stock of the University of British Columbia and is owned by Mr. and Mrs. W. Whitting, Port Kells.

W. H. Hicks, superintendent of the experimental farm at Agassiz, attributes the success of the bird to the fact that contest layers received an abundance of skim milk and green feed, additional to the usual scratch grain and mash.

On completing the test the bird weighed 5.2 pounds, after having laid 29 3-4 dozen eggs weighing a total of fifty-two pounds in a year. Pullet No. 6, owned by the University of British Columbia, held the previous world's record of 351 eggs in 364 days, but her eggs averaged only twenty-two ounces to the dozen.

WILLOWS BY-LAW GETS COUNCIL'S APPROVAL

Bill to Provide Money to Construct Bulldozing at Fair Grounds Given Second Reading

Second reading was given the Exhibition Buildings Loan By-Law at the regular meeting of the City Council last night, and it will come up for final passing on November 24.

The by-law is to authorize the City of Victoria to borrow the sum of $70,000, and to issue debentures for the purpose of the construction of new buildings at the Willows fair grounds, one for a manufacturer's building and the other for a building for livestock and stock judging. The measure will be submitted to the ratepayers at the coming municipal elections.

Under the plan of financing the project the city will enter into an agreement with the Provincial Government for the payment of the interest and sinking fund on half the amount, which will leave the balance of $35,000 to be taken care of by the ratepayers of Victoria. The by-law was requested by the executive of the British Columbia Agricultural Association.

The council, in giving second reading to the bill, has done so with the view of relieving the unemployment situation, as it was stated by the mayor that a great deal of the work would be in labor.

The British Government is considering several plans to increase the consumption of fuel oil made from coal, including a proposed increase in its use by the navy.

OVERSEAS CLUB
The November meeting of the Overseas Club will be held tomorrow in the private dining-room of D. Spencer, Limited, when an interesting programme will be given. Madame Claudet has kindly consented to sing, and Mr. C. L. Harrison will show a fine set of slides illustrating Vancouver Island scenery.

Regular air mail service has just been established between Amsterdam, Holland, and Batavia, Dutch East Indies.

INSTANT RELIEF
100% SAFE

Keeping rid of corns is simply a matter of using the right method—Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Their soothing, healing medication ends pain instantly. Their protective, cushioning feature removes the cause—friction and pressure of shoes.

Once a corn is gone, it will never come back, if Zino-pads are used at the first sign of irritation from new or tight shoes.

Cutting your corns is dangerous—involves blood poisoning. Harsh liquids or plaster often cause acid burns. Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are safe, sure. Doctors recommend them. Sizes also for Callouses and Bunions. Sold every where—35c box.

What Today Means

"SCORPIO"
If November 4 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a.m. to 11:15 a.m., from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m., and from 11 p.m. to midnight. The danger periods are from 7 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. and from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m.
Vexing incidents are forecast for this date, and your innermost feelings will be harrowed. Do not be discouraged if fate seems against you, and remember "The gods help those who help themselves." Contentment with relatives.
Children born on this November 4 will have quiet and unimpaired natures, persistence and determination. They will be skillful and dexterous with their hands, and should be fitted for some trade. They will be friendly and sociable in manner, and will easily make friends.

You venture through life with a faltering, timid step, and you seem afraid to thrust your mind into the conflict. Your superior mental gifts should yield you self-development and happiness, but as it is they do not, because you do not know how or dare not use them. Life is like the sea on a cold morning, not so bad if you plunge bravely in. Hesitancy is often your undoing. You need someone to push you over the brink, for necessity always brings your latent abilities to the fore. When in a corner you are a magnificent fighter—a lion, not a rabbit. No one is more anxious to achieve success than you are, but you do not have the state of mind that alone can ensure it.

You have a very credulous nature, and a very plastic one—you always reflect the color of your associates and environment. The attraction of opposites is true in your case, and you always choose positive types of people for your friends. As a result, you are somewhat at their mercy, and do not seem to mind being led around by the nose. You are usually very sweet-tempered, and are too unselfish for your own good. You have no physical fear, but your mental and moral courage is below par. It takes very little to make you happy and contented, and your life will not be a spiritual failure. Your material ambitions are modest ones.

The Other Bullet

By NANCY BARR MAVITY

CHAPTER XXXI
Peter unblushingly signed Jimmy's name to the telegram, but as the pre-paid reply slipped up on the desk, various in phrases but discouragingly similar in contents, he began to think that he might as well have signed the name of King Solomon.
"Farty not known here," "Worked here two months three years ago stop present whereabouts unknown."
Thus, with minor variations, they read. It required a lot of rest, and a lot of time to sit still in the office and wait, but it was the only thing to do. It would only waste time for him to yield to the impulse to follow the search in person.
The police might have done better. There were moments when Peter was tempted to throw up his hands and call them to his aid. But, after all, Ryder had a legal right to go where he pleased.
He could hardly be said to be "missing." And if he were actually concerned in the Mortimer affair, it would be a fatal mistake to warn him by putting the police on his trail, since they had no charge on which to hold him.
These were the reasons Peter gave to himself as he ripped open another telegram and found it tossed into the wastebasket to join its predecessors.
But the real reason lay deeper. To open the case to the police would be to expose his hand, and lose the precious advantage of his private "tip."

Moreover, to expose Ryder would necessarily expose Lammie—and the police department would select any excuse to get something on Lammie. Even if they had to release him the next day, one day would be enough for Mortimer. And they might not have to release him.
Peter groaned aloud at the conflict of loyalties that tore his mind. There was loyalty to his craft, and to the men of that craft, and the two were at cross purposes.
There was his promise to Alene Everett, reinforced by the strong conviction that even if he failed, she would go on alone. She had persistence. If she stumbled upon the same trail that Peter was following, the warning of his sick reluctance to involve Lammie.

Peter fervently cursed the fate which had led him to Handgun ranch, and back to The Herald office. Damn it, it had never happened before! Reporters were supposed to cover murders, not to get mixed up in them.
It was a chance conversation between the waterfront man and Henderson, in charge of The Herald's broadcasting station, that gave Peter an additional hint.
He had little confidence in it—he had reached the point where everything seemed to lead nowhere, and his faith in things in general was at low ebb—but at least it gave him the illusion of doing something besides waiting for telegrams.
"The wife and children are camping in my shack on the McCleod river," Dwyer was saying. "A wire came for her last night that her mother was very and wants her to come. I don't know how on earth to reach her—she won't get mail up there for a week."
Henderson produced his bright idea.

"If you've got a radio up there, it's easy. I'll just have the announcer tell her to come home."
"When in the world is he on the radio. Maybe he wouldn't tune in on KLX W he did. But it was a chance, and Peter took it. He wrote the message out, worded it carefully, and had our best writer, warning, Ryder walked into the office.
"I was just ready to quit, any way," he said, "but you've caught up with him half way to Jimmy's case. 'But I never thought I'd wake up and find myself a body would take all that trouble to get my valuable, if brief, services. Say, do you think the old man will refund my expenses for coming down?' It's a matter of fact, Peter said, 'it wasn't Sear's that I was offering me?' Ryder's thick brogue was mostly pose, but his wink was spontaneous.
"As a matter of fact," Peter said, "I did it myself. I wanted to ask you something."
"Oh, well," Ryder accepted the look of the expected job without disappointment. "It's an expensive way of conducting a conversation, but it's all right with me. It gave me an excuse to light out of Jimville, and that's what I was aiming to do before another week was out."

"What I wanted to ask you is this. Where did you get that emerald ring? The only possible defence against Ryder's loquacity was to drive straight to the point.
"I never heard of any emerald ring! The emerald is the closest I ever came to the wearin' of the green. I haven't even been drunk enough to see green snakes—not yet, though the time may come if they don't improve the quality of the stuff you get. Speaking of which, what about that drink you were talking about?"
"I wasn't talking about any drink," Peter felt as if he were trying to swim through an entanglement of seaweed. "I'm talking about a ring. An emerald ring. De Lamoth says you gave it to him."
"I never gave De Lamoth anything but I.O.U.'s—and he's still got them. I suppose I'll have to pay up, now that he's seen me in town."

"For heaven's sake," Peter said desperately, "will you stick to the subject?"
"You did give it to me," Lammie, who had stood silent, his back against the door, broke in. "Don't you remember? We were on a four-day bender together. You got fired from The Times for it."
"Did I now? I got fired from so many papers, I can't keep track of them. I must have been just about ready to quit The Times. I can generally talk them out of firing me, unless I want to be fired, which is usually."

"It was the ring with initials on it—L. M. Y. You gave it to me," Peter glanced sharply at De Lamoth. Was it possible that he was coaching Ryder in the story he wanted him to tell? His remarks had certainly been leading enough. But then, the only way to induce Ryder to stick to any topic instead of wandering off issues was by firm leading.
Ryder clapped his hand to his forehead.
"Sure, and I do recall something of the sort, now that you mention it. But I never thought of it as being green at all. If I'd noticed the emeralds, I'd probably have kept it for the sake of Sinn Fein."

"Quit your clowning, Ben," Peter said severely, "and for the Lord's sake stop acting like a stage Irishman. We all know you were born in Boston."
"Ryder will out!" Ryder exclaimed triumphantly. "It's the scandal of my past life you've discovered on me."
"You did give the ring to Lammie, then?" Peter persisted.
"That's what I've been telling you. It slipped my mind until you brought it back to me. It was a great night we were having, and the details of it are hazy in my head."

"Where did you get it in the first place?" Peter forestalled further reminiscences of the "great night."
"Where did I get it now? I had it knocking around in my pocket, not being one for the wearing of jewelry—it doesn't suit my style of beauty to go around all decked out like a Christmas tree."
Peter sighed. Ryder was a likeable fellow, but he had admitted that he had been drinking, and he was not to be trusted. He was denying it. Was his irrelevant chatter a device to gain time? Peter fought his own suspicion, but the circumstances themselves were suspicious.
"I have it now!" Ryder exclaimed. "I won it in a poker game."
"You—what?" The answer was so completely unexpected that Peter's brain reeled. He began to have the curious illusion that the thing wasn't happening at all. He was taking part in some monstrous fantasy, where nonsense ruled in place of logic.
"That's the very way I got it," Ryder had at last sensed the seriousness of the situation. He dropped his brogue and with his conversational side-flights, "It belonged to a lawyer—Lee Fitzgerald. You probably know him."

"It was just a friendly game, in the back room of Nick's place, and Fitzgerald was losing everything but his shirt. He ran out of cash, and put up his watch chain and tie pin, and finally this ring. We kidded him about it, began to talk about strip poker, and all that."
"Not so very long ago. Let me see. I hadn't put in but a day or two. That's how it happened to be still in my pocket, when Lammie and I had our bust."
It simply wasn't possible. Nothing was possible. Whatever was he turned, Peter faced the incredible. If Ryder was telling the truth, the truth, the ring had been tossed from hand to hand as if it were of no value. Yet for its sake a man had committed murder, and he had put up his watch chain and tie pin, and finally this ring. Perhaps the thief had been frightened into getting rid of it. But why, in that case, had he taken it in the first place? Even so, this mad chase must eventually lead to the person who had taken it from the Chinese box.
It was bizarre enough—but the alternatives were equally grotesque. Either a reputable lawyer and two reporters were united in a conspiracy of murder—and their connection with Mortimer, leading to the crime, still remained unfaithful. Or else one of them knew more than he appeared to know. Was it Ryder? Peter felt as if he simply passed on the ring to Lammie, making him the scapegoat? Or had Lammie invented the story and persuaded Ryder to back him up? What about those initials? The triple initial was fairly uncommon. Was there a closer relation than between Lamoth and de Lamoth? Had the shortening of the name from de la Mothe—although a common enough simplification in America—been made with a definite motive of concealment? Every avenue of speculation was a blind street, blocked either by Peter's ignorance or by his own inherent absurdity. But Peter had set out to lessen that ignorance—and experience had taught him

Reductions in Harbor Board Staff Result of Recommendations Made

VANCOUVER, Nov. 3.—Interests of economy and efficiency alone dictated the dismissal of thirty-eight employees who received their "time" at the end of last week, according to a statement issued by the Harbor Commissioners today.

"Reducing staff came about in a natural way through recommendations of the executive officials," said Sam McCloy, head of the board. The chairman explained that eight months ago the four heads of the chief departments of the Harbor Board realized there was insufficient work for a considerable number of employees, and accordingly made up a list of their recommendations for reduction of staff. This recommendation confronted the new commissioners when they took office, and, with diminishing revenues and actually less work for some of the employees to do, the situation, in the opinion of the commissioners, called for action.

Many of these employees were taken on in boom times, but today it was impossible in some cases to find work that would occupy them for a quarter of their time," said Chairman McCloy.

Only Witness of R-101 Disaster Tells Inquiry Of Dirigible's Ending

LONDON, Nov. 3.—The only man who saw the tragic end of the dirigible R-101 sat in the witness chair today and with Gallic gestures told in halting English how the big ship came to him out of the night, careening at a crazy angle before she crashed into the hillside, near Beauvais, and burst into the flames which took forty-eight lives.

Alfred Rabouille had never been away from Beauvais since his childhood before they brought him to London to tell his story. On that night, when the R-101 dived to destruction, he had been poaching for rabbits in the woods near the Beauvais camp.

Today he told the board of inquiry, which is investigating the loss of the dirigible, that he had fled in panic when the ship fell and that later he had kept silent in fear of the penalty for poachers.

The dirigible, he said, seemed to be tilted at a sharp angle and heading downward when he first saw her. Her lights flashed on and off twice. Then the big ship struck the hillside. There was a loud explosion, a burst of flame and Rabouille found himself on his back in the underbrush.

"Then she bounced and seemed to go up in the air," Rabouille said. "She fell and that was the end of her."

OTHER WITNESSES HEARD
Five other witnesses brought from France told of the few minutes which preceded the crash, although none of them actually saw the dirigible strike. They agreed that the ship seemed to be having trouble maintaining altitude.

Their testimony followed that of J. H. Binks, a member of the dirigible crew, who came into the courtroom in bandages. He was under considerable emotional strain and at one point the proceedings were interrupted by his sobs. He was later permitted to regain his composure. Much of his testimony was in the form of a prepared statement, from which, in the eloquent speech of the mechanic, emerged another ghastly version of the tragedy.

WATER TANKS BURST
"The explosion left us in darkness," Binks said. "I turned to Artie Bell, my mate, and said to him, 'It looks as though it's all up with us. Artie.' Then the flames came and the water tanks burst. It was a Steamship through a thick haze to quarantine, the Colombia ran aground twenty-five yards off the sea wall at the edge of Ambrose Channel and hung suspended with a slight list. She was bound from San Francisco by way of the Panama Canal and Havana.

Buffelen and Bromley Reticent Regarding Flight

TACOMA, Nov. 3.—Lieut. Harold Bromley arrived in Tacoma on Sunday evening from Japan, to confer with John Buffelen, backer of the attempted Tokio-Tacoma flight, and will remain here a few days before going south, where he will spend the winter in commercial flying, hoping to make another attempt to fly the Pacific Ocean about May or June.

No further plans were announced by either Bromley or Buffelen, although the aviator said the plane, City of Tacoma, is stored in Yokohama and is in perfect condition for another try at the 4,800-mile hop. The flight is now entirely in the hands of Mr. Buffelen, and any further plans for spanning the ocean next spring will lie with him, Bromley said.
